FRIDAY MORNING, APRIL 6, 1860. AMERICAN COAL FIELDS.

That was a great moment in history, when Peter Ginter, a veteran hunter of the Blue Mountains, returning homeward after a day's unsuccessful hunt, hungry and weary, and feeling himself, to use his own expressive phrase, "the most forsaken of mortals," touched something with his toe, which, moved, mountains. Peter Ginter had heard it, and it came to his mind while he stood, in the wind; and detached some of the precious mineral in which its roots were imbedded, a specimen of which had rolled down on the mountain path just in nick of time to encounter the languid toe of the tired hunter. It is not too much to say that a great crisis in history turned on that seemingly accidental contact.

Peter took the specimen, the germ of comfort, wealth and power to unnumbered millions of mankind-to his supperless cabin. In course of time, he showed it to some one better able to appreciate its value and impor-tance than himself. This person took it to Philadelphia. There it was analyzed and pronounced to contain the elements necessary to combustion. More was sent for. Entered it in considerable quantities and advertised it for sale, with extravagant commendaever, to have one fatal defect. It would'nt burn. We well remember to have seen it lie alto put himself out of the way for a time, to BOOTH, GARRET & CAMAC. escape the wrath of the disappointed purchasers. The popular voice pronounced it stone coal, with a decided emphasis on the adjective. Ere long, however, experiment and art found out the conditions necessary to its combustion. Stoves and grates were contrived and gradually perfected, adapted to its use. And the coal trade, in good earnest, began.

From that period to this, it has developed with a rapidity which has no parallel in history. The coal trade of the United States began in the year 1820, with 365 tons; in 1827 it had reached 48047; in 1837, 881,026 tons; in 1847, 3,000,000 tons. The increased production, therefore, was, in the ten years from 1827 to 1837, 1735 per cent.; in the ten years from 1837 to 1847, 240 per cent.; and in the twenty years from 1827 to 1847, 6150 per cent.

Another view may be taken, which perhaps, exhibits the accelerated increase in periodically forwarded to market, exclusive varied assortment of of the consumption, in and near the places FARMING IMPLEMENTS, of production, and which has not been estimated, is as follows:-

Aggregate in the 21 years from 1820 to Tons. ... 6,847,172 12,371,961 Total furnished from the commence-

Total furnished from the commence-..... 43,060,491 ment to 1853.....

The production during the last year (1859) alove, is estimated to have reached 9,000,-000 tons. So that the expansion of the trade, is still in the process of acceleration, with astonishing rapidity. But when we consider the growth of population, and the new uses to which coal is being constantly applied; it is plain that we are as yet only in the infancy of the trade, and that the figures which now look so startling, will, in comparison with those of future years, dwindle into insignificance.

As a proof of this, we have only to com. pare the production of our own coal fields, enormous as it seems, with that of the fields of great Britain. Our own reached, during the past year, as we have seen, 9,000,000 tons. The annual produce of the British coal mines, lately ascertained by careful researches and unquestionable authority, amounts to sixty-eight millions of tons!-a produce of which we can form no adequate conception.

reached in Great Britain, within a comparatively short period. Some authorities affirm that coal was discovered in England as early as the ninth century, and it certainly was in use for various economical purposes in the twelfth century. But it is little more than two hundred and fifty years since it came into general use, as fuel, in London. Its introduction for domestic purposes was retarded by the difficulty of employing it conveniently, and by the natural prejudice against such a description of fuel, as a substitute for wood, in cities. Blythe, as late as 1648, says, "The famous city of London petitioned the Parliament against two anusances (nuisauces) or offensive commodities, which are likely to come into great use and esteem, and that is Newcastle coal, in regard of their stench, and hops, in regard that they would spoyle the taste of drinck." The good people of England seem to have since become thoroughly reconciled both to the smell of coal and the taste of hops.

It is only of late years that the coal trade of England has reached anything like its present vast dimensions. The application of woal to the arts, and especially the enormous consumption of it in the generation of steam, has given to the work of mining and transporting it a prodigious impulse. So that in about two centuries and a half, a trade for which, in its early period, one or two ships were quite sufficient, has reached the inconceivable amount of 68,000,000 of annual produce; employs a standing army of 200,000 | Tiers & Paynter's Super Phosphates of LIME men to mine and prepare it, and several Bang & Sons' Raw-Bone do thousand ships to transport it.

The far more rapid growth of our population, the characteristic activity and enterprise of our people, the great amount of coal which will be required to work the extensive mines of iron and other metals-in a word, the ever increasing demands of advancing art and civilization, lead us to predict an expansion which will outstrip all precedent or possibility of calculation.

Will the coal fields hold out? N. Y. Com-
